

Northwestern, YRG, and Our Very own Julia Yeam Recognized for Excellence in Global Health

Northwestern University's Program in Global Health Studies was recently awarded with the 2018 IIE Andrew Heiskell Awards for Innovation in International Education. In this news story, Northwestern highlighted several aspects of the program that set it apart from other universities; among those included was its high level of student engagement, both locally and abroad. To underscore this point, they discussed the Young Research Group's research and the high-impact research of its members. In fact, a large portion of the article focused on our very own Julia Yeam and her work with the HWISE project.

Congrats to all everyone and keep up the good work!
